As a manager, in charge of many staff, you will know accessing good quality cancer training is expensive. This usually involves travel and time out of the office, leading to backed up workload. Good quality training tends to be expensive and a strain on budgets and workload.

Don't get me wrong, there is great value in offering such study days and workshops. You meet other like-minded people, can network and experience focused learning. I do still offer a variety of face-to-face teaching opportunities. I think it is important, however, to offer a variety of training and education initiatives which give flexibility of approach and allow you as a manager to get the best out of the training budget you have.

Webinars are a great solution; convenient, flexible and affordable. These webinars are everything you need to improve the cancer knowledge of your staff without the need for travelling and time out of the office. Each webinar lasts around 60 mins and is run usually first thing in the morning or early afternoon; plenty of time to fit in all the other work that need to be done and they do not compromise on quality.

Paul Brittain, Research Nurses recently wrote,

“David is an excellent teacher and ensures there is ample interaction throughout his webinar sessions. He is happy to answer questions on the day as they arise and offers the opportunity to answer any questions that arise once the webinar is finished. He is very knowledgeable and can easily interact with people whatever their previous knowledge base. This has been a fantastic and very knowledge building experience, something that has been re-iterated by my colleagues undertaking the webinars. Being new to research and Oncology I have found the webinars to be an excellent source of sound information and look forward to experiencing more of them as the subjects become available.”

Training is essential

What are the current challenges to good quality cancer training?

- Budgets are tight;
- Training is not always accessible without travel;
- Quality of training cannot be assured;
- Training is not consistent;
- It is expensive;
- Staff away from the desk for too long, not getting work done.

And I am sure I have missed some bullet points out.

Training is essential and is one of the most important elements to a successful team, retaining good staff and motivating them to work smarter.

Budgets are tight, granted, and therefore it is important that you spend what budget you have in the knowledge that you will receive cancer training that does not compromise on quality, that offers a flexible and convenient approach to training.

David has been teaching about cancer for the last 30 years, he is trusted by organisations such as The Christie Cancer Centre, National Cancer Registration and Analysis Service, National Services Scotland, Wales Cancer Registration Service, National Cancer Registry of Ireland, Cancer Research UK along with many others and he regularly teaches people from NHS Cancer services, MDT coordinators, clinical coders, pharmaceutical companies, hospices, physiotherapy, occupational therapy, rehabilitation service and speech therapy about cancer. You need not worry about the quality of the training given.

David delivers all the webinars, thereby ensuring consistency of material and delivery throughout. Everyone attending the webinars is assured of relevant, informative and thought-provoking material which will enhance their knowledge of cancer and increase their confidence.

The webinars can be accessed where you are. In your office, at home, on the train, it doesn't matter. No need to spend time travelling and staying overnight away from family and friends. And no need to spend a whole day training. Each webinar is between 60 and 90 mins so can easily be fitted into the days schedule, leaving your staff lots of time to do their day job.

The webinar subscription will not only save you money on the actual webinars, but overall will save you in TIME and MONEY not spent on travel, overnight stays, time away from the day job as well as course fees.

The webinars utilise the equipment that your organisation has already invested in, so no need for new computers or software also. They provide relevant, excellent and informative cancer training and education in an atmosphere of inclusiveness and fun.

Throughout the subscription you will receive quarterly reports outlining how many webinars have been accessed by how many people and an evaluation of their experience on the webinars. Each attendee will receive a certificate of attendance, so you can monitor and record everyone's CPD.

But don't just take my word for it...

"The way the Webinar and David explains the courses is brilliant, I have only been in Cancer Research coming up a year and my learning curve is steep, however for my development this is proving invaluable"

"As always, these Webinars are thoroughly enjoyable and well set out to follow, David's method of teaching is fantastic. As administrative support to our Cancer Team understanding the terminology is invaluable, the learning process for me continues.

"These webinars are fantastic. They help me to understand what the term Cancer means in my non-clinical setting. These webinars are a vital source of training and education for me."
